quality of coffee produced is very fine, being the same as that known as "Kona" coffee, grown on the island of Hawaii. The pineapple grows wherever the coffee trees thrive, but no attention s paid to its culture.

At Keauai there is an area of land situated on a flat that would make a fine plantation, there being an abundance of water, and the landing being as good as the average on this coast,

Beyond Keshae, towards Haua, the Reciprocity Sugar Co. have broken ground and erected a mill. Here the land becomes lower and more feasible. The facilities for plowing are found on detached areas of land which, in the aggregate, amount to quite a large acreage. By means of flumes the cane and fuel can be brought to the mill, and the abundant showers that fall in this region insure good crops.

Hana, where is located the Hana plantation, possesses some exceptional advantages, in that its harbor is the best to be found on the windward coast. Its entrance is open to the mouth, and is easy. Inside good anchorage is found. and a strip of sandy beach facilitates the landing and shipment of cargoes. The plantation itself is in fine order, the soil being of an essential volcapic character and easily tillable. The supply of water is none too great, sufficing for mill and domestic purposes, but not affording any for irrigating. There are some extensive fish ponds located here, the only ones on this coast. The people living in the district round about are all more or less dependent upon the plantation for employment outside of their own little Kuleanas. At Kipahulo, ten miles further east on the the largest sugar cane growing plan- coast, the Kipahulu plantation and mill are in operation. Here the soil is very largely mixed of the plantation at Wailuku and with fine, broken stone, and is rich. Williams is is out of the range of the trade winds, and immanager. This plantation has ex- mediately within the influence of the South or "Kona" showers. Having been under cultivation for a number of years, and its owner the late Captain Jas. Makee having taken great pains to plant thousands of trees, this spot contains General Commission Merchants, some of the finest grazing grounds on the island. The cultivation of cane is carried on yet to a small extent, but much attention is paid to the raising of beef for the market.

Beside the splendid growth of "Eucalypti" found here, there is a small plantation of the cinchona tree which is growing finely. The trees have attained maturity, and samples of the bark which have been examined by experts have been pronounced to be rich in the valuable alkeloid for which the tree is famous. There seems to be no reason why plantations of these trees should not be a sucsess here. Passing on beyond Ulupalukua towards Makawao, the country is dryer, but the soil remains exceptionally deep and light. On the foothills, at the edge of the forest large crops of excellent potatoes and corn are grown in quantities sufficient to supply the local demand at a fair price. There too industries are wholly in the hands of Chinamen who make a living out of the business. There are one or two stock ranches here, and one or two more at Makawao on which some butter is made, and some stock raised. A very large area of the land overlooking Makawao is taken up as a sheep range, and as the animals have the benefit of the change from the top of the mountain down almost to the sea level, they

In reference to the timber growth of the island I would say that the large forest on the windward side is the grand conservator of water for the entire island. In its upper part-where it clothes the side of the mountain up to an elevation of 6,000 feet-is a region of perpetual moisture. Lower down the rain falls every day, and almost countless streams are kept running from this supply. There are many square miles that must remain, for a long period of time, unexplored; but on the lower edges of the woods much valuable timber is taken out for wood working and fuel. Above Makawao is located a saw mill-the only one on the island-from which comes pretty much all the koa boards used in this market. There are some five or six kinds of native woods that are valuable for all purposes to which hard wood is put, samples of which have been promised from this region. In numerous guiches on the island are immense quantities of the "olona," the bark of which yields a very fine fibre. Besides this there are forests of the "lauhola" or screw palm the fibre from which, is very good for bagging and other coarse materials. The pasture lands of the island are quite extensive, and are well

The landing places where general merchandise, sugar and other articles of a bulky nature can be shipped and landed are but few. The harbors are, Kahului, Maliko, Hana, and Maalaia, (the last, like Lahaina is more properly a roadstead.) The landings are, Hamakuapoko, Huelo, Keanae, Nahiku, Kipahulu, Nuu, and Makena. At these landings boats must take their chances. In moderate (i. e. settled) weather not much difficulty is experienced, but at the best, much care must be exercised in landing or receiving

As regards the kind of labor employed, I would say that all the native Hawaiian labor obnage an ground at the one tainable is employed at good wages. The still existing deficiency is made up by shipping Portuguese, Chinese and South Sea Islanders. Of these the Portuguese seem to be preferred for general utility. Many of the planters find the Chinameu best in stripping cane, but for the general service of the plantation the Portuguese take the lead. Wherever it is practicable to do so the waterflume is used to transport the cane to the mill. At Spreckelsville, Hamakuapoko and Alexander & Baldwin's train cars are used, and at the other plantations oxen and carts are almost exclusive-
